INTRODUCTION

The New York State Law Enforcement Accreditation Program (LEAP) was established in 1988 through the enactment of Executive Law § 846 (h), which created a special Council within the Division of Criminal Justice Services (DCJS) to oversee program activities. It also directs the Commissioner of DCJS to prepare an annual report on the operation and results of the Accreditation Program. The annual report must further identify those law enforcement agencies making application for accreditation, the agencies accredited, and the fiscal impact on the law enforcement agencies that have been accredited. This 21st annual report documents the principal achievements of calendar year 2010.

I. WHAT IS ACCREDITATION?

Accreditation is a progressive program which enables law enforcement agencies to evaluate and improve their overall performance. The cornerstone of this strategy lies in the promulgation of standards containing a clear statement of professional objectives. Participating administrators then conduct a thorough analysis to determine how existing operations can be adapted to meet these objectives. When the procedures are in place, a team of independent professionals is assigned to verify that all applicable standards have successfully been implemented. The process culminates with a decision by the Accreditation Council as to whether the law enforcement agency has satisfactorily met the standards. Accreditation provides formal recognition that an institution meets or exceeds general expectations of quality in their field.

II. PROGRAM OVERVIEW

The New York State Accreditation Program provides formal recognition that a law enforcement agency meets or exceeds general expectations of excellence in the profession. Law enforcement agencies seeking accreditation must implement a total of 132 standards in the categories of administration, training, and operations. In essence, accreditation acknowledges the implementation of policies that are conceptually sound and operationally effective. The Accreditation Program has four principal goals:

- To increase the effectiveness and efficiency of law enforcement agencies utilizing existing personnel, equipment and facilities to the extent possible;
- To promote increased cooperation and coordination among law enforcement agencies and other agencies of the criminal justice system;
- To ensure the appropriate training of law enforcement personnel; and
- To promote public confidence in law enforcement.

The Accreditation Program enables administrators to strengthen existing procedures while simultaneously creating a solid foundation for the agency's future. Additional benefits of accreditation include:

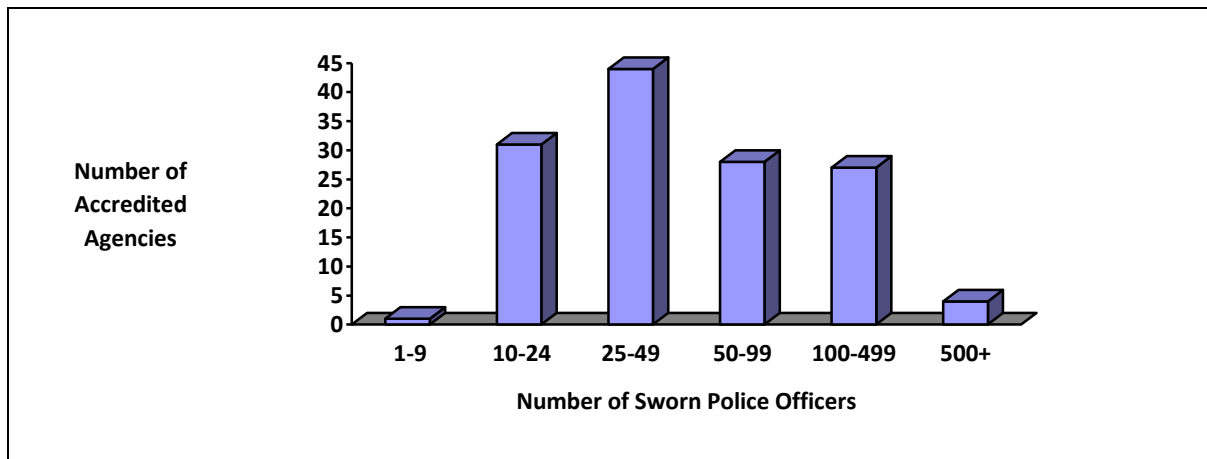

- ✓ Independent confirmation that policies comply with professional standards;
- ✓ Assurance of fair recruitment, selection and promotion processes;
- ✓ Diminished vulnerability of agency policies and procedures;
- ✓ Enhanced understanding of agency policies and procedures; and
- ✓ Greater public confidence in the agency.

Once a law enforcement agency implements all of the 132 standards, a team of three assessors is assigned to conduct an on-site assessment to verify that all applicable standards have been met. The team's findings are submitted for review to the Accreditation Council, which has exclusive authority to grant or defer accreditation. Throughout this process, DCJS' Office of Public Safety (OPS) provides daily administrative oversight of the program.

If accreditation is granted, the law enforcement agency remains accredited for a period of five years, providing annual signed statements of continued compliance. In the fifth year, the respective agency must seek reaccreditation by demonstrating, during a thorough on-site assessment that it was in full compliance with all applicable standards during the initial five year period of accreditation. The agency must also demonstrate that policies are in place to ensure ongoing compliance. This dual obligation is challenging and can only be achieved through sustained leadership and the commitment of all agency personnel.

There are 558 law enforcement agencies eligible to participate in the Accreditation Program, with 134 currently accredited. Accredited agencies range in size from 9 to close to 5,000 sworn officers. The table below breaks down the number of accredited agencies by number of sworn officers.

Accredited Agencies by Size

III. OPERATIONS

Currently, 57% of all police officers (excluding New York City) are employed by an accredited agency. A complete list of participating agencies can be found in Appendix A.

A. Efforts to Facilitate the Accreditation Process

Office of Public Safety staff continually strives to promote the benefits of accreditation as well as to support local efforts to achieve accreditation through presentations and direct technical assistance. In 2010, OPS conducted two formal presentations to law enforcement agencies in order to garner interest in the program. Additionally, OPS staff provided technical assistance and/or informational materials to more than 100 law enforcement agencies, including accredited agencies, agencies working toward accreditation and those considering participation.

Technical assistance provided by OPS included critiques of over 260 file folders submitted by 26 agencies in preparation for assessments. Upon completion of the folder reviews, staff provided written comments to the chief executive officers and program managers from each of these agencies. Additionally, staff offered comments on policies and procedures; responded to inquiries concerning the implementation of specific standards; provided guidance to agencies initiating the accreditation process; and assisted program managers as they prepared for their assessments.

A website is also maintained by OPS staff, containing program materials such as an informational brochure, applications, manuals and a listing of accredited agencies. Since 2006, a tutorial for program managers has also been available to provide an overview of the accreditation process. This tutorial also has proven to be an excellent refresher for experienced program managers and chief executive officers. The site may be accessed at: <http://www.criminaljustice.state.ny.us/ops/accred/index.htm>.

While OPS' main objective is to guide participating agencies through the accreditation process, it is clear that experienced assessors, chief executive officers and program managers of accredited agencies also play an integral role by offering assistance to other agencies and promoting the accreditation initiative. Experienced managers and assessors have first-hand knowledge of the various ways standards can be implemented to meet local needs. They are also familiar with the challenges facing agencies as they maneuver through the process and are a valued resource for agencies in need of guidance.

B. Training

OPS conducts a training course for agency program managers, which provides an overview of the accreditation process as well as a comprehensive step-by step demonstration of how to achieve accreditation. Training is also available for accredited agencies on maintaining accreditation and preparing for re-accreditation. An Assessor Workshop is also offered by OPS staff to experienced program managers and supervisors from accredited agencies who have made application to become assessors and have been approved by the Assessor Selection Committee. In this course, applicants are given the tools to professionally and effectively conduct an on-site assessment. Upon successful completion of the course, the applicants are eligible and ready to participate as a member of an assessment team. During their first assessment, the new assessors are evaluated by a team leader to determine their ability and suitability to conduct assessments in the future.

Chief executive officers are also encouraged to attend these training sessions because of the integral role they have in the accreditation process. The attendees frequently remark how instrumental this training is in assisting law enforcement agencies in navigating through the accreditation process.

IV. THE IMPACT OF THE ACCREDITATION PROGRAM

Accredited law enforcement agencies report their progress and obstacles through an Annual Compliance Survey. The program is regularly credited by police department command staff with raising the overall level of professionalism of the department. Survey responses have also noted that compliance with the accreditation standards have made it easier to comply with discovery requests during lawsuits. Many participant surveys have noted significant improvement in areas such as proper recording and storage of evidence, the completion of personnel evaluations, in-service training documentation, and use-of-force related policies. One respondent noted that their agency was being threatened with a lawsuit for excessive force, but when a review of their “Use of Force” policy demonstrated that the officer had acted well within the limits of the policy, the suit was dropped. Respondents continue to report savings on department insurance premiums because of their accredited status, a welcome relief to many Police Chiefs and municipal leaders in these difficult fiscal times.

Three out of the eight agencies that received initial accreditation during 2010 completed and forwarded Program Implementation Surveys to DCJS. The responding agencies reported an average cost of $37,700 to achieve accreditation with 93% of that cost, or an average of $35,200 attributed to salaries of the personnel working on the accreditation process. This indicates that, although there is a requirement of staff time devoted to the process, particularly in becoming accredited, participating in the program does not represent substantial new costs to the agencies. Departments spent an average of $2,500 in non-personal service costs to purchase supplies and equipment to meet program standards.

The Program Implementation Survey responses indicated that the implementation of program standards had a “moderate” impact on their departments. Areas in which the program had the greatest influence included documentation of in-service training and regular review of agency general orders. One respondent reported a boost in staff morale upon their department becoming an accredited agency, especially since so many of them had played a role in the process. Additionally, it was noted that the accreditation process is not only an excellent exercise in reviewing all department policies and procedures; it ensures vigilance in maintaining the 132 standards specific to the Accreditation Program, as well as monitoring staff compliance with those standards. Of particular note is the fact that two agencies reported that the accreditation process was minimally difficult to accomplish and all three agencies noted that the process was well worth the effort.

V. ADMINISTRATION

The Accreditation Council consists of 17 law enforcement and community leaders, 15 of whom are appointed by the Governor. The Assembly Speaker and Temporary President of the Senate each make an appointment.

Program assessors, who conduct the assessments of law enforcement agencies seeking accreditation and reaccreditation, are selected through an application process. The Program has 78 active team leaders/assessors.

A. Activities of the Accreditation Council

The Council meets quarterly and oversees all major aspects of the accreditation initiative. The Council also reviewed 26 assessment reports and a total of 110 Annual Compliance Surveys submitted by accredited agencies in accordance with State rules and regulations.

B. Program Management

As previously discussed, OPS staff oversee the daily management of the Accreditation Program and provide support to the Accreditation Council. Staff responsibilities also include implementing Council policies and overseeing the daily administration of the accreditation initiative. Routine duties include processing applications from agencies seeking to participate in the program; developing and disseminating resource materials; providing technical assistance; conducting on-site visits; and working with agencies that are scheduled for re-accreditation. Program staff also schedule assessments and perform related administrative functions such as selecting assessment teams; handling logistical matters related to the assessments; reviewing file folders; processing travel vouchers for assessors; mailing and tracking annual compliance surveys; verifying that agencies seeking accreditation and reaccreditation have implemented all applicable standards; maintaining records and databases; and drafting reports for Council review. Specific tasks undertaken by OPS staff during the past year included continued work on the development of an electronic management system for utilization by agency program managers and updating program materials and training courses.

New York is also involved with a coalition of states that either have an accreditation program or are in the process of establishing one. This coalition, known as “AccredNet,” meets annually and was formed to enhance relationships among state programs, providing mutual support and assistance and facilitating the exchange of information. As of this writing, 24 states are members of AccredNet. Since the Accreditation Program began, New York has provided assistance and materials to states with established programs as well as those implementing accreditation programs. Over 30 states have established accreditation programs.

VI. PLANS FOR THE ACCREDITATION PROGRAM IN 2011

Local officials and representatives from law enforcement agencies continue to express significant interest in accreditation, and OPS plans to work closely with the Accreditation Council to strengthen the program. In 2011, OPS will continue to focus on promotional activities, training seminars, technical assistance, and infrastructure improvements to increase participation, promote electronic management of program files, and enhance services. Program staff members plan to offer several training courses for program managers seeking initial accreditation as well as for those who seek information on maintaining accreditation and preparing for re-accreditation. Training also will be provided for new assessors to maintain the pool of qualified and trained assessors.

Staff will continue to provide technical assistance to agencies participating in the program and will facilitate networking between program managers from accredited agencies and assessors, and those working toward accreditation. The State University of New York Administration has expressed its intent to promote participation in the Accreditation Program in 2011 among all 28 SUNY campuses that employ police officers. OPS staff members are working with SUNY public safety staff to develop the needed training programs to assist in their efforts.

Lastly, members of the Accreditation Council in conjunction with OPS staff will aggressively look to identify cost-cutting measures associated with maintaining the growing program. These measures will be carefully reviewed before implementation to ensure the integrity of the program is maintained or strengthened.

VII. CONCLUSION

Accreditation is a valuable tool for law enforcement agencies that are striving to enhance their effectiveness as well as to increase the level of professionalism in providing police services. The Accreditation Program not only furthers these two goals, but it also increases the level of accountability within individual departments; provides an effective management tool; enhances community relations; and contributes to overall agency pride. In order to facilitate the participation of as many departments as possible in the accreditation process, DCJS will continue to seek innovative, efficient and effective methods to support and expand the Accreditation Program during 2011.
